MRS. POST HAS A PROBLEM

The fountains of sacred rivers flow upward, everything is turned topsy turvy. This plant of Euripides is echoed 23 centuries after the Greek dramatist by no less a modern mentor of manners and morals than Emily Post, whose name is synonymous with etiquette.

Mrs. Post is nonplussed by the confusion of modern life, by the way in which the younger generation has taken the bit in its teeth. But she is not worried as to the basic goodness of her fellow women, she tells a New York audience. Instead of deploring the disappearance of the ancient institution of the chaperone she chuckles over the interesting problems that have resulted; instead of teaching the conventions to her young readers she finds she must adapt the conventions to fit modern behavior.

Etiquette means something more important in human conduct than choosing the right fork, a lapse of which Mrs. Post herself frequently is guilty since she is both near-sighted and absent-minded; she also, let it be whispered so that your children do not hear, puts her elbows on the table at dinner when she feels like it, and says, "it really makes no difference."

What does make a difference is eternal vigilance to be considerate of the rights of others, and to be kind.

At the moment Mrs. Post is deep in the study of a great problem—is it correct for a woman to pay all or part of the dinner and entertainment check?

She is brooding about this to the exclusion of all others and will write a book about it when she has completely made up her mind.

In the daytime in the business world, she unites a man and woman are equals, work as companions, lunch as coworkers. But in the evening matters are changed, the woman becomes a woman again and the man pays and pays. Is that fair, she wonders, when women are earning as much or more than the men who entertain them? Would it not be fairer if he takes her out once and she takes him another time?

We await with bated breath her decision on this vital question.

NO LONGER IVY-COVERED

The spirit of the modern age has made so deep an invasion of old institutions, including the college campus, as to indicate the beginning of a revolution in college architecture. The tendency of new buildings of higher education appears to be away from the traditional low long, ivy-covered "halls" of sprawling Alma Mater, and toward the narrow, tall office building type.

The country was startled when it had a glimpse of the first of these in a great university, Pittsburgh's towering Cathedral of Learning which dominates the view of the Iron City for many miles around. Since the novelty has worn off, the unusual structure has become the architectural pride of the university and the community.

Another building of the same type is the proposed $5,000,000 sixteen-story unit of Hunter College planned by the City of New York to replace the 65-year-old structure in Park Avenue. More than 5,000 students and 500 Model School children will be housed in the new building.

It is claimed that in this type of building the percentage of net usable area exceeds that of most other college plants.

"GIVE HER WINGS" by MARIE BLIZARD

SYNOPSIS

When Julie Allerdice, 19-year-old daughter of Professor Allerdice of the Ramsey Preparatory School for Boys, manages to get herself engaged to Dr. Richard Jessup, Fayette's most eligible bachelor, she looks forward to a glamorous future as a married woman. Of course, most people in town had thought Dick would marry Millicent Dodd, who is 33 while he is 38, but Millicent hides her disappointment and gives an engagement party for Julie. Less tactful is Tommy Jessup, Dick's younger brother. He is still in college, and has always loved Julie. He tells her she will be sorry if she spoils four lives by marrying Dick. Julie tells Tommy to mind his business, but in less than six weeks she begins to find being engaged is boring. It is then she remembers the words of Pete Waddell, barnstorming aviator who gives flying lessons at a neighboring field. He had told her there was a great future in flying for a beautiful girl. She makes a trial flight with Waddell and decides she will learn to be a flyer. But the course costs a hundred dollars. She tries to make the money collecting minor news items for the Blade.

CHAPTER IX

"Well, well, Julie! Looks like you got a lot of stuff here," Mr. Clark, editor, business manager, advertising manager and reporter staff of the Blade flicked the six pages of typewritten copy over rapidly. "Let's see... 'bout fifteen hundred words. That'll run a column and a half. Give this slip to Mable in the outside office and she'll pay you."

"A d-d-dollar and a half!" Bing! Julie's rose-colored balloon blew up. "Yes sir, we can use six columns of this stuff a week."

"Well, you can get it somewhere else! I'm through being a working girl," Julie said tartly and clicked her heels angrily out of the office and up the street.

She didn't know where she was going or what she was going to do, but she knew she wasn't going to go home and do any more sewing. Or any more telephoning, or any more magazine selling.

She may have given up her industrial effort but she hadn't given up her intentions. She was going to get that hundred dollars!

Meanwhile she decided to stop at the drug-store and have a soda and do her thinking over it. She wound her slender ankles around a stool at the soda fountain and brooded thoughtfully over her straw.

"Just missed your bean," Joe Wilson informed Julie.

The Doc, Dick was the last thing on her mind at the moment. For a few minutes she played with the idea of asking him to loan her the money but her good sense told her it would be a stupid move. She didn't want to be in debt to Dick in case she'd ever...

But there was Tommy! She fished in her pocket-book for a nickel, powdered her nose, flipped the nickel toward Joe and went out.

Fortunately she found Tommy alone in Judge Platt's law office where he clerked between classes at the Law School.

"Look, Tommy," she explained carefully. "It's only seventy-five dollars I need. I'll pay it back, I promise! Don't you see I need this chance? You've always been my friend. That's why I've come to you."

"Julie, this tops everything! You haven't got any more sense than a baby. It's dangerous! If you had any brains in that pretty, empty head of yours..."

Julie got up with great dignity.

"I had... gosh, I'd give it to you if I had it. But I haven't, and when I get it, Julie, it will belong to Millicent to repay the money she loaned me for school."

"Millicent!" Julie cried. "But she's my friend! Of course, I'll go to Millicent."

Tommy barred her way. "Look, Julie, I don't count on you for much. But there's such a thing as decency. You can't go to Millicent. Do you want me to tell you why?"

No, Julie didn't; she knew. But she said, "Tommy, I've made remarks to you before about minding ords that Waddell had sent her with her application for the course. She had been more than surprised herself at the organization back of Pete's enterprise. At first she had thought vaguely that he was going to teach her to fly the way that Tommy had taught her to drive the Rattletrap.

She had managed that business of the Rattletrap nicely. The Rattletrap was Tommy's battered motor and without it, she would have had no means of driving to Clunesville, eighteen miles away, for her flying lessons. Tommy hadn't been very your own business. I need not repeat them."

"Just missed your bean," Joe Wilson informed Julie.

The twelve-twenty roared distantly. The echo of its shrill whistle lay on the midnight air like its taste of smoke. The Brook's cow moo-ed a dumb protest in the lane back of the Allerdice vegetable garden. A car backfired on Elm Street. A pair of heels clicked on the new cement sidewalk in front of the Applegate's house.

Julie flung the light summer blanket over the foot of her bed, turned her rumpled pillow to the cooler side and thought "if it weren't so noisy I could go to sleep."

She couldn't even keep her eyes closed and yet an hour before when Dick had left she had been hard put to restrain her yawns.

She gave the doctor a portion of her thoughts. He had taken it more sensibly than she had expected. He hadn't thought her insane—"pretty, empty little head with no brains"—as Tommy had done. She had explained to him patiently, prettily that she felt so inadequate, there was nothing that she did well and now this was her chance. It wouldn't make any difference to the two of them, to their engagement, she explained and believed that she was doing it honestly.

Yes, he had taken it sensibly, she remembered with a kind of disappointment. He shouldn't have. He should have protested that he feared for her safety. Instead he had asked her all kinds of questions about Pete Waddell's credentials, licenses and things like that. Fortunately she had been able to show him the rec-gracious about it, saying he wanted no part of her foolishness, but in the end, he had grudgingly said she might borrow the car. She'd probably have to buy gas but that old tin can couldn't require much gas.

It better hadn't; she had only $5.25 above her hundred. She hoped classes wouldn't stretch over meal-times. If they did, she'd have to say she was dieting. She wasn't going to take any basket lunches.

She supposed she might have asked Millicent for more than the seventy-five necessary to take out the round sum. But she had found it hard to ask for anything. Even without the memory of Tommy's scornful eyes, she would have found it hard to ask Millicent for the money.

There in the darkness, she tried to still the piping voice of conscience that she heard above her own plans. "Why shouldn't I have asked her for it?" she demanded of herself. "I'm going to return it. Pete says I'll make money and I will. Millicent has plenty of money."

It wasn't the loan that bothered her. "Oh, the dickens! I know that they're like brother and sister. That was over years ago. If she wants Dick she can have him."

Instantly the words entered her mind, she banished them. She had not given up Dick Jessup. She was still engaged to him. And she meant to stay engaged to him. What if this flying career didn't work out?

But it would. Oh, it would! she thought gleefully.

Hand Grenade Plunges Shanghai Into Terror

SHANGHAI, Dec. 3.—(INS)—A hand grenade, hurled into the midst of 8,000 jittery Japanese troops grimly staging their "victory parade" in the International Settlement, plunged Shanghai into wild terror and excitement today.

The blast, which disrupted the parade and caused utter confusion in Nanking Road, where the bomb was thrown, led to a series of fantastic incidents which may produce the most dangerous international repercussions yet born of the Sino-Japanese war.

Authorities said the grenade was tossed at the marching Japanese by a Korean revolutionary. The man was immediately shot, and at first was reported dead, but later was reported "still breathing."

Estimates of the casualties resulting from the affair differed considerably. The official Japanese estimate stated one Nipponese private was seriously wounded, two slightly injured and a Japanese consular policeman critically hurt.

But other reports stated that in addition to the three wounded Japanese soldiers and the dead or dying Korean, the casualties included a Sikh policeman, three Japanese civilians and a British lawyer who broke a Japanese flag over his knee.

Bensalem Board Names New Officers

also announced the Christmas holiday for Bensalem students will begin at 3:35 p. m. on Dec. 23 and continue to 3:30 a. m. on Jan. 3rd. Wrestling and basketball were mentioned as the sports now interesting most of the students.

The treasurer's report given by Mr. Craig, was accepted by the Board. Mr. Williams, reporting for the Purchasing Committee, stated that a new sewing machine had been obtained for use in the Trevose school. He also reported the arrival of the tablet armchairs that were ordered in November.

Oscar Schreiber, reporting for the Building and Grounds Committee, stated that necessary minor repairs to several of the schools had been completed. He also reported the installation of two new electric clocks at the Edgington school. Mr. Markley, chairman of the Transportation Committee, reported a few temporary changes in bus schedules. He also reported the condition of Street Road and the inconvenience caused by the present condition of the road, necessitating many additional miles on the daily schedule. The road is completely torn up from Bristol Pike to Hulmeville road and is closed from the new Super Highway south of Trevose.

Superintendent of Schools, S. K. Faust, speaking for the teachers and courses committee, indicated the need for a testing program for the first three grades of the elementary schools for the improvement of their reading ability. The Superintendent plans to have the program under way in the near future. In his report for the school doctor and nurse Superintendent Faust indicated that routine medical examinations have been practically completed by the medical department and that where remedial measures have been found necessary the parents have been notified.

The superintendent also outlined in brief a supervisory procedure which will be instituted after the Christmas holidays which will consist of a program of visitations within the district by elementary teachers.

ures have been found necessary the parents have been notified.

"COLLEEN MOORE" DAHLIA

SEATTLE, Wash.—(INS)—The "Colleen Moore," an old-gold colored dahlia, is a new variety developed by Dr. Hal Smith, Seattle horticulturist. He named it for the actress when she visited here with her $435,000 "doll house," exhibited for benefit of the Children's Orthopedic Hospital. When Colleen's infant nephew, Michael Pearaill Morrison, also arrived in Seattle, Dr. Smith named another new dahlia for him.

JUST A SLIGHT ERROR

VANCOUVER, B. C.—(INS)—He thought it was a retardant, but it turned out to be a precipitate. Plumber T. C. Atherton III his blowtorch and reached for a nearby jug containing a liquid which he thought was water and would use in case of fire. When the heat of the torch caused a rocking explosion, it was discovered that the "water" turned out to be benzol.

FASHION PARADE

By Orry-Kelly

(Famous Hollywood Stylist Writing For International News Service) HOLLYWOOD—(INS)—Either trimmed with fur or unadorned the cloth coat is Miss Hollywood's choice for daytime wear. It is after dark that coats of mink, silver fox or Persian lamb have their way.

Coat lines in Hollywood this fall are as individual as the stars themselves. Some are pencil slim, collarless but with great bushy fur sleeves; others are boxy; some swagger and have "snuggly" collars; and many are nipped in at the waistline and flare out to the hem.

The most intriguing coat of all, in our estimation, is Olivia De Havilland's tubular model of black spongy wool with its wide lap and hidden fastener. Although the neckline is built up high there is actually no collar to be coat, but the sleeves are a 1937 masterpiece. All of silver fox, from shoulder to wrist, they follow the seasonal whim of emphasizing the top of each garment. With this Olivia wears a high black, Russian-like hat, with crisp veiling falling to the shoulders.

The boxy type of coat which came in last spring in fingertip length carries on this fall but is now as long as the dress. It is primarily a sports coat and is most becoming on a girl as tall as Marcia Ralston. She has one in football gold which is just right for outdoor spectator wear. The material is heavy and nubby like a fabric chinchilla and the coat is completely plain except for its muff pockets.

Although swaggy coats aren't getting the play this fall that they had the last few years there are still enough of them in the fashion parade for them to be considered in any discussion of current silhouettes. Lots of these are in tweed, both in pastel and vibrant colors, and are frequently collared in lynx, natural skunk, red or platinum fox.

The flared patterns are still the most frequently seen in fashionable coats. These coats, that are always fitted well down as far as the waistline, are done in a wide range of fabrics from round tweeds for sports, mannish worsteds for street and velours for dress occasions. Anne Shirley has one of these coats done in shepherd's check and tailored with black velvet lapels. Cecelia Parker wears a similar beige one collared in plucked beaver which also borders the pockets.

Also with flared skirt is the type of coat that boasts the corseleted waistline. Carole Landis has such a one in black velvet with Peter Pan collar of Persian lamb.

It costs only 25 cents to prove that Courier classified ads pay.

The Great Game of Politics

"unsatisfactory." It is known now that a great many unemployed did not bother to fill out and return the complicated card; and that a great many that were filled and returned gave misleading information. For another thing, even if the returns had been complete and accurate early in November when the census was taken, they clearly would not reflect the true situation late in January when the results will be announced. In brief, this widely bally-hoed count of the jobless, costing $5,000,000 and forced on the Administration by the demand for facts, might better not have been taken, which isn't the fault of Mr. Biggers, who did as good a job as could be done, but due to two hard facts—first, that a voluntary census was certain to fall anyhow; second, that the rate at which men are now losing jobs would put any census out of date in two months.

WITHOUT ATTEMPTING to give figures, what seems perfectly clear is that in a short time this "business recession" will push unemployment back to the 1936 peak, where it took more than $2,000,000,000 to handle the situation. Assuredly, Mr. Lewis is justified in saying that the problem has not been solved. Solved? It hasn't been touched. It hardly has been approached. It never really has been faced. But whose fault is it? It is true it is now an appalling proposition; that its size, seriousness and cost are not easy to exaggerate. Yet, there are certain simple facts which those like Mr. Lewis, in the labor field, and Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Hopkins, in the political field, seem to ignore when they discuss it.

MR. LEWIS complains that no one has thought the problem through, but it isn't necessary to think very deeply to know these things:

First, that the only possible way to diminish unemployment is to provide jobs for the jobless.

Second, that the only place where jobs can be found is in private industry.

Third, that private industry cannot provide jobs unless it can make a profit. When the point is reached where it cannot make a profit, it first curtails production, cuts its payroll and, as a last step, goes out of business.

ALL OF WHICH is axiomatic, trite and obvious, accepted by everyone who believes in the profit system—

THE SEALTEST SYSTEM

—AND WHAT IT MEANS TO YOU

In milk and ice cream, mankind at any age finds virtually every essential food-element necessary for well-being. Because these dairy products are so important, the development of the Sealtest System of Laboratory Protection was inevitable.

The world's largest dairy laboratory system was organized in the interests of research and scientific protection. Through constant checking, they seek to produce ice cream of the highest quality and purity... perfecting present flavors, and also developing delicious new ice creams.

Supplee is an integral part of this outstanding scientific organization. Continual improvement in quality and flavor is our constant aim. You gain greater enjoyment and wholesomeness in every spoonful of Supplee Ice Cream.

AIR-MINDED THIEF

STAMFORD, Conn. — (INS) — Police here are looking for an "air-minded thief" who stole the flying suit belonging to William Beise, Greenwich aviator.

Beise reported his suit, parachute, goggles and all were stolen from his parked automobile.

CANDLE SUBSTITUTE FOUND

SEATTLE, Wash. — (INS) — Eighty candles were too many for any cake, King County Democrats decided, as they planned a party for Chairman here—was started. More than 2100 James A. Murphy, celebrating his 80th birthday. Finally the lighting problem was solved in an appropriate and modern manner. The cake was illuminated by an 80-watt electric light globe. Murphy, also a state senator, is the oldest man in the Washington legislature, and active in spite of his years.

"SKIERS' DREAM" FULFILLED

GOVERNMENT CAMP, Ore. — (INS) — Skiers in this section were jubilant today when construction of "the skier's dream"—a lift which will pull skiers to the top of the ski bowl near here—was started. More than 2100 feet of rope was purchased for construction of the lift, which will be operated by means of automobile power. The lift will eliminate the tiresome climbing from bottom to top in the ski bowl which formerly took much of the joy out of skiing.

Neat Butter

A quarter-pound stick of butter can be cut quickly and neatly into pats for serving with a piece of piano wire, or a strong white sewing thread held taut between the hands.
